Theories Which Account for the Functions of the Vital Fluid.

St. Louis Republic.

Do you know that some of the very best Do you know that some of the very best physicians in the land are far from being satisfied that the heart is the organ which causes the blood to circulate in the veins and arteries? The theory of Harvey, which maintains that the impulsive stroke of the heart is the "sole motive power" is disputed by persons who know more about blood circulation in a minute than he ever did in his life. Various causes for the phenomena of blood circulation are assigned by the different students of the signed by the different students of the subject, but the majority of those who differ from Harvey say that the true cause of circulation is to be found in respiration. That function brings carbon into the lungs. This carbon mixes with the venous blood mixture forming the true fuel of the mixture forming the true fuel of animal life.

The oxygen which is also taken into the carbon and a slow form of combustion cases. Wherever combustion is going on heat is evolved. In this case the heat is communicated to the blood, which is about seven-eighths water. The longs, being in partial vacuo, and having a temperature of at least 35 degrees above that required to change water into vapor i when the water in question is in a complete vacuum), steam is generated. This enlarges the volume of the blood and exerts a specific force. The valves on the right side of the heart close against this force, while those on the left.

open to give it free passage. Thus, according to this theory, the true motive power is produced which first causes and then keeps up the circulation of the blood.

When this theory is elaborated it is very conclusively proved that the heart has nothing whatever to do with the circulation of whatever to do with the circulation of blood, but to determine by its valves course of the current and by the me-nical force of the stroke to equalize flow —St. Louis Republic.
